

1. A father gambles away his property in a casino, and so his family must move to a public shelter.
2. A city official commits suicide rather than face bribery charges.
3. A judge accepts interest-free loans from a bank where he has invested money entrusted from a children's fund.
4. A politician cuts through red tape to get a company a franchise; the company expresses its thanks by giving him an all-expense-paid vacation in Europe.
5. An FBI agent sells documents to the Soviet Union because he needs the money to support his family.
6. A terrorist kills an innocent hostage to protest political injustice.
7. A landlord commits arson to evict tenants who are paying low rents under rent-control law. He collects a large insurance payment.
8. Someone dumps toxic waste near a residential neighborhood to save his company a big expense. Children born there afterward have deformities.
9. A physician markets an ordinary cream as a miracle formula.
10. A critic praises a worthless book because she wants to be welcome in the writer's literary circle.
11. A critic praises a trashy film because the producer buys lots of expensive advertising in his newspaper.
12. A singer popularizes a song that urges young people to experiment with drugs; as a result, some fans become addicts.
13. A socialite sets up a call-girl ring for elite clients.
14. In exchange for a promotion, an employee has an affair with someone highly placed in the company.
15. A woman who dislikes her neighbor's ethnic group sends threatening messages to make the neighbor move out.
16. A member of a neo-Nazi group spreads hate literature against a certain minority group.
17. A person never leaves home without consulting a horoscope about what to avoid or seek out.
18. A palm reader earns a living reassuring insecure people about their future.